The vast difference between international thought in the United States and in Europe can be illustrated by the recent trip of Chancellor Breuning and Foreign Minister Curtius, of Germany, to Italy, for a visit with Mussolini. According to the statement of the German officials the visit was for the purpose of having "an opportunity to learn to know personally the distinguished head of the Italian government," and the statement added that it was hoped that the visit would result in further steps for the pacification and economic rehabilitation of Europe, "two aims in which the interests of Germany and Italy thoroughly converge."

To the average American this trip would seem to be a fine thing, calculated to bring two nations of Europe closer together, and to increase the possibility of some sort of a United States of Europe in the near future. At least that is what the average American would think if he were to take time to think about the matter at all, which is doubtful.

But in European nations the impression of the visit is somewhat different. In France, and in the Balkan countries, including Poland, the visit of the Germans to Rome gives rise to a feeling of misgivings if not actual anger. In Paris there is sharp criticism of the visit of the Teutonic statesmen to Rome and speculation as to whether or not this is not the opening step for a revival of the alliance between Germany, Austria and Italy, a triple alliance which fell to pieces in 1914 at the beginning of the World war. This thought has given rise to much uneasiness in France and there are now suggestions that the French officials may not make the trip to Berlin which they were planning to make in the near future in the interests of Franco-German good will.

Whether or not there is anything below the surface to justify French suspicions which are always easily aroused, the fact that Nationalist circles in Germany are not hesitating to approve the trip to Italy, and that the reactionary newspapers in Berlin are declaring that the time has now arrived for a closer Italo-German understanding, are not calculated to soothe the French feelings. That so much ado should be made out of an official weekend trip from Berlin to Rome, may seem strange to people in America, four thousand miles away, but it is to be remembered that the nations of Europe are not separated by vast oceans, and that there are centuries of traditional discord dividing them. In fact, the greatest difficulties of the recent London meeting to rescue Germany from her financial difficulties, were the political suspicions among the various nations.

France does not want Germany to become too friendly either with Italy or Great Britain and on the other hand Great Britain would view with displeasure a real

CIGARETTES, RADIO, STOLEN FROM THE LOCAL POOL HALL

The Campbell pool hall on Railroad avenue was broken into by persons unknown last Friday evening and several articles taken away. Included in the loot were several cartons of cigarettes and a valuable radio.

Entrance to the building was gained through a side window. The theft was reported Saturday and deputy sheriff A. Covey is investigating and searching for the looters.

Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Page, their son-in-law, E. N. Cleaves of New York City, their daughter, Mrs. Edwina Kerwin and her little daughter Jean, visited last Sunday at Boulder Creek. Little Miss Jean, who spent the summer here with her grandparents, returned with her mother to San Francisco for the opening of school.

Franco - German entente. Even though this might bring immediate peace to Europe it would create so formidable combination that Great Britain would no longer be the balance of power in Europe. And so goes the European chess game, with its moves and counter moves. It would be unfortunate indeed, if the visit of the German statesmen to Italy would cool the recent friendlier feelings between France and Germany, but one is never sure what is going to happen in European politics.

From our point of vantage, thousands of miles away, these suspicions and counter-suspicions may seem childish. They are not childish, however, but potentially dangerous. Our national and international ideals are so different from those of the governments of Europe that it would be more than foolish for us to take any hand in the European diplomatic game. That is the reason we are much better off as a nation at home minding our own business. When the time of crisis comes and Uncle Sam can help, he is always willing to help, in the interest of peace and prosperity, to the best of his ability. But he can only extend just and impartial help if he is not bound up in European politics, is not committed in advance by superorganizations and entangling agreements. That is why it is better for us as a nation to steer clear of the League of Nations and other old-world attempts at super government.

TRY TO RUN MR.
EVANS OFF THE JOB, LANDS IN JAIL

Late Thursday night Patrolman Harry Evans was saying goodnight to George Morton on the corner of Campbell and Central avenue when a car bearing two men, thought to be Homer Fair and Frank Norris, pulled up in the intersection, and one of the men, (believed to be Fair), unlimbered a pistol and fired six shots in the direction of Evans and Morton, who were standing in front of the Press office. Fortunately for Evans the man was not a good marksman, none of the shots taking effect.

The car moved on then, and Evans phoned the sheriff's office for reinforcements, but neither Evans or deputy sheriffs were able later to find the pistol or his companion. At three o'clock in the morning, however, after the deputies had gone back to town, Evans, who was standing in front of Ainsley's cannery, observed five men pass the pool hall, coming uptown. He advanced to meet them, taking his stand at the railroad track.

Evans perceived Fair and four others, evidently reinforcements. Said he: "The first one of you who crosses this track is going to get into trouble."

The belligerent Mr. Fair replied: "I'm from Tennessee, and I go where I want to, and where I go I run things to suit myself—and I'm going to run you out of town."

"You and who else?" asked Mr. Evans. "And you're not going to run things to suit yourself around here, either."

"You think you're pretty tough, don't you?" sneered Mr. Fair.

"I'm just as tough as I look," replied Mr. Evans.

"Fair, you are the only one of the crowd I want, and I'll be down in the morning to get you."

"Just try to get me," taunted Mr. Fair.

"I'll be down—early," said Mr. Evans.

Early the following morning Patrolman Evans, accompanied by Constable Copeland and armed with a warrant, went down to the Fair shack opposite the S. P. depot, and after threatening to kick the place into kindling wood, routed out the Messrs Fair and Norris and threw them in the county jail. Fair had a number of unexploded .38-special shells in his pocket, along with a lot of empty ones, but the gun was not found.

At a hearing before Judge Blaine Friday, Aug. 14 Fair pleaded not guilty and demanded an immediate trial, which was set for today, Aug. 18. After a very exciting hearing, in which District Attorney Fitzgerald cross-examined the four witnesses for Fair and got them so muddled up that their testimony was worthless, the judge announced that sentence would be passed at 10

Revolutionary Movement Threatens Machado's Regime in Cuba—German Reich Saved by Defeat of Radicals.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

GERARDO Machado, president of Cuba, not long ago scoffed at the danger of revolution in his tight little island. But the threat has materialized in a way to make him sit up and take notice. Rebels in various regions staged outbreaks that alarmed the government and martial law was declared in the effort to stave off civil war. Machado and his cabinet ministers conferred with military and civil advisers, and the martial resources of the republic were hastily mobilized. Troops were sent to the troubled areas and an effort was made to improvise a navy by commandeering private yachts and arming them with eighteen pound guns.

Meanwhile the authorities were gathering up all the known and suspected rebels they could catch and putting them in jail. Hundreds were arrested and charged with treason. Former President Menocal and Colonel Mendieta were credited with the leadership of the revolt and especial efforts were made to get them, but at this writing they are still at large. The most active of the rebels were in the province of Pinar del Rio, and it was reported to President Machado that they, with Gen. Balderno Acosta, mayor of Mariano, as leader, were preparing an invasion of Havana province. Indeed, there were several sanguinary skirmishes only a few miles from the capital, which was isolated by the cutting of communications.

Col. Julio Sangulity, chief of the army flying corps, ordered every available plane to keep on constant patrol along the north coast, especially in Pinar del Rio, and for several miles out at sea, in search of both Cuban and foreign organized filibustering expeditions. Several craft that attempted to escape the navy patrol ships were bombed by the flyers.

Late reports said Menocal, Mendieta and others were on a yacht making their way to Chaparra, Oriente province, where Menocal has a large number of followers. He was at one time manager of the Chaparra sugar mills, the largest in the world.

Headquarters of the revolutionists have been opened in New York and are in charge of Dr. Domingo Mendez Capote, who says he is the "chief delegate of the rebels' organization in this country. He was vice president after the war of independence and has had a distinguished career.

FOR the time being, at least, the German republic is safe, for the latest attempt to wreck it has failed. This was the move to dissolve the Prussian diet through a plebiscite, which, if it had succeeded, would have imperiled the reich. The scheme was devised by the Hitlerites or Nationalists, and that other set of radicals, the Communists, joined with them, although their ultimate aims are utterly diverse. But even with the aid of the National Socialists the combination fell some 3,500,000 votes short of accomplishing its purpose.

The French government was almost as pleased by the result of the German plebiscite as was that in Berlin, for it meant that the growing accord between the two nations would not be broken, and it was said in Paris that the proposed visit of Premier Laval to Berlin was now a certainty.

INTERNATIONAL experts charged with the task of dovetailing the Hoover moratorium plan and the Young plan announced in London that they had reached a complete agreement, which was signed at the treasury office. Their communique said:

"Complete agreement was reached, as regards the detailed measures required to give effect to President Hoover's proposal in case of payments by Germany under the Hague agreement of January 20, 1930.

"Recommendation of the experts in regard to suspension of these payments have been approved by the governments of Australia, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Greece, India, New Zealand, Portugal, Rumania and South Africa.

"Agreement also was reached in regard to detailed measures for suspension of interallied war debts to the United Kingdom, France and Italy of payments under agreement with Czechoslovakia.

"Agreement also was reached on the principle that payments due by Hungary under the Paris agreement of April 23, 1930, and payments by Bulgaria under the Hague agreement of January 20, 1930, should be suspended during the year ending June 30, 1932.

"But in this case certain adjustments must be made, as complete suspension of these payments might result in suspension of certain classes of payments to individuals. Accordingly, the committee agreed in principle that all payments of funds 'A' and 'B' under the agreement signed at Paris on April 20, 1930, should be continued during the Hoover year.

"Negotiations are continuing in regard to adjustments required in the case of Bulgaria."

PLANTERS of the fourteen cotton states of the South are asked by the farm board to plow under one-third of their crop immediately, in order to enhance the price of the other two-thirds. The board sent telegrams to the governors of the states urging that this course be adopted. In return, said the board, the cotton stabilization corporation will agree to hold off the market its 1,300,000 bales until July 31, 1932, and will urge the cotton co-operatives financed by the board to do likewise.

EDWARD A. O'NEAL, president of the American Farm Bureau federation, announced at a meeting of state farm bureau leaders in Milwaukee that the federation "must renew its demand for an equalization fee" and that the present marketing act was inadequate to cope with agriculture's "most acute problem—control of its surplus crops." The announcement was said to be unexpected by the farm board officials and the administration in Washington.

"The federation has always stood for the principle of the equalization fee, as expressed in the old McNary-Haughen bill, which provides that each unit of a commodity produced shall bear its fair share of the cost of disposal of surplus," O'Neal said.

PROBABLY to his own surprise, quite a vigorous though small boom has developed for Melvin A. Traylor, Chicago banker, as the Democratic nominee for the Presidency in 1931. It was started in Malone and Hillsboro, Texas, where Mr. Traylor formerly lived and where he is most popular. Then, a few days later, Daniel Upthegrove, president of the St. Louis Southwestern railroad, announced that he would support the banker for the nomination, and that a committee was being formed to further Traylor's candidacy. It is not likely that Mr. Traylor takes the matter seriously except as a compliment, but those who know him and his abilities feel that the Democratic party might go further and fare worse. He is president of the First National bank of Chicago and has been prominent in national and international financial affairs.

SHARPLY criticizing "third degree" methods in police force administration, which is found to be widespread in both cities and rural communities, the Wickersham commission reported to President Hoover that "it remains beyond doubt that the practice is shocking in its character and extent, violative of American traditions and institutions, and not to be tolerated.

Citing many instances of police brutality and unfair tactics by officers, the commission declared that the trend toward "lawlessness in law enforcement" had resulted in "a deplorable prostration of the processes of justice," and urged that congress enact a code of federal criminal procedure which might serve as a model for the states.

SENATOR FELIX

Hebert of Rhode Island, chairman of the senate committee on unemployment, spent the week end at the Rapidan camp and then gave out, apparently as President Hoover's spokesman, an attack on the idea of a government dole and federal unemployment insurance. He asserted that the latter would inevitably lead to the dole as it operates in England. Mr. Hebert based his conclusions upon a study of the dole abroad made during a trip from which he recently returned. He visited most of the countries of western Europe for the special purpose of investigating unemployment insurance, and he predicts now that there will be little clamor in congress for the establishment of such a system. He said of the dole:

"The main difficulty with the dole system, as it operates throughout Europe, with the possible exception of Italy, is that it is intertwined with politics."

system, as it operates throughout Europe, with the possible exception of Italy, is that it is intertwined with politics."

ORGANIZED labor in certain parts of this country is not doing much to help solve the question of unemployment. Quite the reverse. Take the Hoover dam, for instance. The workers on that big project made wage demands that construction company holding the contract considered extortionate, so 125 men quit work. The superintendent immediately shut down operations and about 1,000 men were thrown out of work. The company, he said, was six months ahead of schedule, and could afford to refuse concessions that would cost $2,000 daily or $3,000,000 during the seven years allowed for completion of the dam. Living conditions for the workers on this desert job are admittedly rigorous.

In Chicago thousands of men and women were thrown out of employment when more than one hundred small movie theaters closed rather than submit longer to the demand of the motion picture operators' union that two operators be employed at each house. The managers said this was unnecessary and that they could not afford it.

Extensive highway construction operations in Illinois are delayed and may not get under way before next spring, because labor organizations objected to the rulings of a state board as to the "prevailing wage" in various districts, which must be paid for the work according to the law authorizing it.

These are only a few instances of the many that might be cited. It would seem to the ordinary citizen that organized labor might well strain a point or two in such a time of stress.

MISS MARY ANDERSON, head of the women's bureau of the Department of Labor, is a woman of ideas and the ability to express them. Having returned from Europe, she gives out an address urging a modern era for cooks and maids, a higher status for domestic service in keeping with modern industrialism. Her program includes the establishment of training schools to fit the worker to the position through the federal employment service, and an employee's life independent of the employer's household. She thinks modern apartment living means not the eventual extinction of the worker in the home but added advantages for her.

Miss Anderson also points out that apartment living must necessarily give opportunity for much part-time work.

PRESIDENT HOOVER'S fifty-seventh birthday came on August 10, but he entirely disregarded the anniversary. Returning from the Rapidan camp, he spent the remainder of the day in work as usual, and though Mrs. Hoover had hurried back from Akron, there were no guests for dinner.

COL. LUKE LEA, Nashville publisher, his son, Luke Lea, Jr., and four others were indicted by the grand jury in Nashville on charges of conspiracy in connection with the affairs of the defunct Liberty Bank and Trust company.

DELEGATES from nearly all nations were present when the press congress of the world opened in Mexico City. Men and women from North and South America, Europe and the Orient were welcomed at a reception given by Senator Don Lamberto Hernandez, head of the federal district. The inaugural meeting was directed by Frank L. Martin, acting dean of the school of Journalism of the University of Missouri, and the guests were addressed by Dr. Don Jose Manuel Pulg Casaurano, secretary of public education. The newspaper men of Mexico then gave the delegates a theater party, and next afternoon they were received at Chapultepec castle by President Ortiz Rubio. On Wednesday there was an excursion to the archeological excavations at San Juan Teotihuacan, and on Friday the closing day of the congress, a great fiesta was held in the stadium.

Of course between these festive affairs the delegates transacted considerable business, much of it through their committees, and at the three general sessions some serious and thoughtful addresses were delivered.

PARKER CRAMER, the aviator who was mapping out a northern air mail route to Europe, got as far as Lerwick in the Shetland Islands safely on his way to Copenhagen and then ran into trouble that, it is feared at this writing, resulted in his death.

Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh were held up at Point Barrow for three days by adverse weather conditions, and then took off for Nome. However, dense fogs compelled them to come down on the north coast of the Seward peninsula about 75 miles from Nome, which is on the south coast of that peninsula. When the fog lifted they went on to Safety bay, near Nome.

How They Say "Number, Please?"

Being Galloway.

IN NORWAY

When an American tourist from this liner, which has been caught by the camera while anchored off the village of Balholm, Norway, goes ashore and calls up the folks back home by transatlantic telephone, the operator does not answer "Number, Please?" She doesn't even use the Norwegian equivalent for these words. She answers with the single word "Centralen," which means "the exchange." She then connects him with the toll operator, who answers by giving the name of her office. So begins the building up of a telephone circuit of land lines, submarine cable, radio channels, and land lines again, to some point in the United States. Norway was first placed in telephone reach of the United States in July, 1928, when transoceanic service was extended to 44,000 telephones in Oslo, the Norwegian capital. Extensions have been made from time to time and now Norway's approximately 195,000 telephones may be reached from North America.

Hours Of Occurrence Of Automobile Accidents

The peak of fatal automobile accidents by hours of the day in 1930 occurred from 4
p. m. to 9 p. m., as 38 per cent of the accidents which resulted in deaths happened within these five hours. Thirty-seven percent of the non-fatal accidents occurred from 4 p. m.
until 9 p. m. From 12 midnight to 6 a. m. 11 per cent of the fatalities occurred and 9 per cent of the accidents. This is a mighty large percentage when you stop to consider the proportionately small number of cars on the road at that time. Six to 11 a. m.
is the safe time for driving, but no time is safe unless adequately covered by insurance. Better stop at Farley's office and talk it over today.
